The use of whole blood has become a valid option in a number countries, be it for the treatment of massive bleeding in cases of polytrauma at emergency rooms, for pre-hospital care in remote areas, or for meeting the needs of air ambulances and military medical care. As such, the use of whole blood, other blood products and blood derivatives in pre-hospital care is being widely discussed in the field of emergency medicine and military health care. A world-renowned experts on this current topic has agreed to participate.
